🔗 Linus Torvalds' Daily Routine

Linus Torvalds is a very famous software developer. He creates and manages the Linux operating system. He usually starts his day at 8 a.m. at home. Linus does not go to an office—he works remotely from his house. In the morning, he drinks coffee and checks his emails. He often reads messages from developers around the world. They send questions or code to him.

After that, he reviews changes in the Linux kernel, the core of the operating system. He does not write a lot of new code now, but he gives feedback to other developers. Linus sometimes joins online meetings, but he prefers email. He says it is faster and more efficient.

In the afternoon, Linus takes a break to go for a walk or spend time with his family. He does not work all day, but he works regularly. In the evening, he checks his computer again and reads updates from the Linux community.
